What's new in Indexing and Abstracting Services?

Brief Summary

Publishing practices and indexing scholar databases do not stand still. Today, one of the major databases, Web of Science™ Core Collection - The Conference Proceedings Citation Index, – CPCI has coverage across 256 disciplines with over 148,000 conference proceedings from 1990. CPCI collection provides an opportunity for researchers to track the emerging and new ideas among scholarly communities. By choosing and covering the published research on a regular basis, indexing and abstracting services provide further quality assurance and help to maximize the discoverability of the published content. However, besides all these benefits, indexing seems to be one of the challenging and major problems for proceedings specifically in the social sciences area. So, in this presentation, we will be sharing our know-how and experience in publishing and will be sharing the latest trends and challenges in the indexing process from the publishers' perspective.
